Katie,

Please know that even though I am resigning, I am willing to help you out anyway I can. So please don't feel like I am walking away.

I am absolutely miserable. Receiving that text last night was no accident either. It was so unprofessional and rude.

Also, I am not doing the things that I am really good at and that I am passionate about. Things I said I wanted to do from day one. The only thing that I was able to get done was a mission, vision and values. All the rest of the high level strategy work that brings people together to talk with a unified voice, I haven't been able to do. 3 months later, almost none of this has been done.

Working with Vanessa is too toxic for me. I can't remember the last time I have had so much conflict with someone, and I have worked with a lot of very difficult people in the past. It's my own fault for letting this go on so long. I really should have said no the first day. If I let this continue, it's just going to get worse and hurt the cause. I feel like she constantly steam roles me and it puts me in a position where I just want out. If I try and explain myself she doesn't listen. She also tries to therapiize the situation as well and I feel like she makes it my fault.

I want to see Breaking Code Silence be successful. So it's best that I just step back to allow that to happen.

Jeremy
